

History

AsIs Technologies was started by two university students in 1997. They came together through a fair amount of luck but thankfully they had the same vision: their goal was the production of specialised software, hardware and internet solutions, designed to make every client work better, smarter and bigger. They did not want to sell a computer, or a computer program. They wanted to sell a system that would ensure their clients could take on the world! We at AsIs Technologies all believe in this same philosophy, and the company's founders are still here, ready to help us stick to that vision.

Since then, AsIs Technologies has gone on to engaging a number of software project managers, software developers and software testers to form an amazingly well rounded team of people that want to make the most of software.

We see things like project management, issue tracking and customer management solutions as not something you should have to pay through the nose for. We believe that low cost, workable solutions are what you want, so that you can have it now, and before your competition does!

When we talk about web sites with our clients, we prefer to discuss how they intend to be able to update their own information... not how long a support contract will be. We believe in empowering you to a point where you are in control of what's going on, and loving it!

Of course if your idea is hands off, then we are happy to take up the work load. With team members like ours, it's hard not to find someone who wants to take control and look after your needs.
